That the Administration provide an update on plans for Universal Basic Income/Guaranteed Basic Income implementation and roll out.

Jenny Hsi, the ARPA (American Rescue Plan Act) Program Manager for Somerville, and Erica Satin-Hernandez, the City's ARPA Director, provided an update on the City's Guaranteed Basic Income (GBI) program, which is funded through the American Rescue Plan Act. They reviewed the document titled Equity GBI Update 5.27.25. The program provides 200 participants with $750 per month via a reloadable debit card, issued in partnership with GiveCard. Manager Hsi explained that most participants use the funds for immediate needs like rent and food. The flexibility of accessing cash, compared to benefits like EBT, has been especially important. Few participants have more than $150 remaining at month's end, and many have also used the funds to pay down long-term debt. While the city cannot track how cash is spent, participants have shared that this flexibility enables them to cover rent and childcare, which are expenses that cards often can't accommodate. While the chart showed only 1.1% of tracked transactions go toward housing, most rent payments are made with withdrawn cash, which is not reflected in tracked data.

The program is being evaluated by UMass Boston through surveys and midpoint interviews. Initial feedback shows that beyond financial relief, participants feel more stable and engaged in their communities. A post-program survey and a sustainability study will be completed in June to inform future initiatives. Director Satin-Hernandez shared that the City is considering broader questions for future programs, such as how many people can be supported, how to maintain privacy, and how to incorporate participant feedback. She also noted the need for deeper partnerships with local institutions and schools to create a more comprehensive anti-poverty strategy. She noted that while one year is not enough to transform economic standing, the flexibility and supplemental nature of the funds have made a meaningful impact. The Office of Housing Stability and the Somerville Family Learning Collaborative have also offered workshops to help participants prepare for the program's end. Chair Strezo expressed that there is so much need from participants in programs like this, so she expressed concern that the participants are being negatively impacted if a deeper plan of immediate anti-poverty initiatives are not being considered. She believes participants are going to be feeling anxiety over this program ending.

That the Director of Parks and Recreation discuss in the Committee on Equity, Gender, Seniors, Families and Vulnerable Populations, the introduction of an ongoing middle school girls intramural hockey program.

Susan Yerkes, Director of Parks and Recreation, shared that 14 girls recently participated in a youth hockey clinic, which served as an early step toward developing a middle school intramural program. A three-year strategic plan has been created to build on this momentum, focusing on growing interest, increasing participation and ensuring the long-term sustainability of the program. The plan includes collaboration with neighboring communities such as Malden, Somerville and Wakefield to help meet future demand and expand opportunities for girls in the sport.

Mayor's Request
(ID # 25-0456)

Requesting the appropriation of $160,000 from the Unreserved Fund Balance ("Free Cash") to the Department of Public Works Repairs to Buildings Account for fabrication and installation of courts at Founders Rink.

The proposed transformation of the Founders Rink into a multi-use recreation and community center aims to create a space for residents of all ages and abilities. While the current polished concrete floor limits its use, adding removable flooring would expand programming opportunities for fitness, wellness, and social activities. This would promote physical health and reduce social isolation. This plan aligns with the SomerVision2040 goals, offering a quicker, more adaptable solution compared to large-scale infrastructure projects.

The rink was not used for hockey last year, and users shifted to the Veterans Rink. Greg Robidoux, a community member and board member for Somerville Youth Hockey, explained that this shift displaced several other groups, including club teams and neighboring communities that had lost their own rink access. He acknowledged the excitement around expanding opportunities for middle and high school girls, but expressed concern over the loss of rink time for existing youth hockey players. He noted that the rink is uncomfortably cold in winter and hot in summer and stressed that while Somerville Youth Hockey supports the multi-use concept, it's discouraging to see rink space go unused. He emphasized the importance of maintaining access for all user groups and expressed a desire for inclusive planning. Aidan Byrne, a community member, questioned the need for additional flooring at all, noting that pickleball had already been played successfully on the existing surface. Ruth Foreman, another community member, voiced support for accommodating a wide range of programs but stressed the continued need for ice access, especially in winter. She pointed out that younger skaters benefit from smaller rinks and that many programs, including Learn to Skate, have already been displaced.

Liaison Hutter added that the proposed flooring would be removable, allowing for flexibility and ongoing evaluation of community needs. While the current proposal does not include removal of the flooring, that option could be considered in the future. The goal is to prioritize the needs of Somerville residents.

Chair Strezo suggested involving the hockey community more directly in the conversation. Director Yerkes responded that Parks and Recreation is open to working with any organization to maximize the use of the space. Chair Strezo concluded by saying there appears to be a shared commitment to inclusivity and collaboration and is confident that everyone involved is working to ensure that no community members are left out.
