Anthotypes*

Saturday, May 25, 1-3 pm (rain date, June 1)

Anthotype (means flower print) is an Eco-friendly photo-based process that uses colorful flowers and plant emulsion to create ephemeral images and photograms, using the sun to make exposures. It was discovered during the Victorian era by the same inventor of the more familiar Cyanotype (sunprint) process. Join local artist, photographer and gardener Mary Kokol for an anthotype demo showing how to extract color from plants to make images. For all ages and experience levels. *Supported in part by funding from the Somerville Arts Council, a local commission supported by the City of Somerville and the Massachusetts Cultural Council.
